Lund University's policy for sustainable development

Lund University is to work to understand, explain and improve our world and the human condition, thereby being a driving force for sustainable development. Through education, research and cooperation with wider society, the University is to make reliable knowledge available today and in the future.

During their education, students at Lund University are to gain insights and knowledge on aspects of sustainable development which are relevant to their subject. Thus the students will come to spearhead sustainable development in their professional lives.

Research and cooperation as well as their processes and results are to promote sustainable development.

The principle of “practising what we preach”, working preventively, for continuous improvements and compliance with applicable legislation, is to characterise everyday activities at Lund University. This is a credibility issue which presumes active participation from the University’s employees and students.
