Faculty travel and research grants

Most grants are intended for researchers, doctoral students, teaching staff, associate professors and similar at Lund University, but there are also some that undergraduate and Master’s students can apply for. The application period for faculty travel and research grants is at the start of the spring and autumn semesters, normally in January/February and September respectively.

Most faculties have a scholarship group that assesses and ranks the applications. A decision is then taken by the Faculty Board or equivalent. The faculties have different regulations on the size of grants and how often the same person can be awarded a grant. This is stated in the call for applications concerned.

Travel scholarships for students

Travel scholarships for undergraduate and Master’s students are announced in February each year. Eligibility for travel scholarships extends to those studying at the undergraduate, Bachelor’s, Master’s (60 credits) and Master’s (120 credits) levels. You can apply for a travel scholarship in connection with degree projects and academic papers, for exchange studies and for other foreign travel connected with your education at Lund University.

You apply via a form directly through the online application system, where you also upload the attachments you want to submit. When the application period is over, scholarships are granted from the respective foundations based on the purpose of your trip, a ranking that takes into consideration academic achievements and rate of study, as well as your application and the documents you have submitted. It is therefore very important that you enclose the documents that are relevant in your case, as you may miss out on a scholarship if your application is incomplete.

Decisions are usually announced in April and all successful applicants are notified via email.

University and student nation scholarships

Each semester, students at Lund University are invited to apply for University and student nation scholarships. The application period in the autumn is September and in the spring, February. The University scholarships are awarded to undergraduate and Master’s students. You are often required to have studied for at least two semesters to obtain a scholarship. The student nation scholarships are awarded to undergraduate, Master’s and PhD students.

You apply via a form directly through the online application system. Attachments are only to be sent via post in special cases. Only one application per person is to be submitted, in which you apply for all the scholarships you are eligible for.

All applicants are ranked according to field, grades and rate of study. Precedence is applied for some scholarships, if for example you are related to the donor or you are born in a certain province of Sweden.

A small number of scholarships are known as semester scholarships, which means that they are granted for four semesters. The conditions for payment of these scholarships is communicated separately to the successful applicants.

Decisions are usually announced in April and November and you will be able to see in the online application system whether you have been awarded a scholarship or not. No notification is sent out, as the announcement is made online when the decisions are made.
